Raven's Strike

Inspiring devotional reading from two classic writers Both Andrew Murray and C. H. Spurgeon wrote and taught about the immeasurable value of intercessory prayer in the life of every believer and the entire church. They believed that persistent, fervent prayer is, perhaps, the greatest work that every Christian can do by the grace of God and in the power of the Holy Spirit. Spurgeon told his congregation, "No one can do me a truer kindness in this world than to pray for me." Editor L. G. Parkhurst has compiled selections on this important topic from Murray's devotional books and Spurgeon's sermons updating them for today's reader. The thirty-one devotionals begin with a reading by Murray, then Spurgeon's commentary on that aspect of intercession as well as a concluding prayer. The Believer's Secret of Intercession powerfully persuades us to labor together and individually in fervent prayer so that sinners might be converted and blessings might fall upon the saints of God. A unique devotional handbook on a topic of great importance for the church today.

Intermediate Environmental Economics

I have lived my life through poetry from the time I was 13 years old, reading Emerson and Shakespeare after school, to the present when I am now 71. This book presents poems I wrote that reflect on the meaning and purpose of my life, starting when I was a callow youth and continuing up to the present moment. It is thus a true autobiography of one man's journey through life as realized through poetry. But it is not a look backward like some autobiographies that are written at the end of life. It is more like a journal of entries written in the moment looking forward from youth to old age. The first part (age 13 to 31) covers my early meditations on life, death, youth, vocation and career. The second part (age 31 to 45) describes my search for love and how I found it in marriage. It also celebrates some of the many friendships that have enriched my life. The poetic narrative then goes rather silent from age 45 to 60 when I was busy writing the professional articles and books that defined my career. The third part (age 60 to 71) deals with the challenges of growing older. The last part of the autobiography has not been written yet because I am still alive. The book presents a lyrical narrative of human development as Erik Erikson might have described it, moving from one stage to the next from childhood to old age. For that reason, much of the material in these poems is intensely personal. I did not reveal them as I was pursuing my medical and academic career. Indeed, even my parents and siblings never saw these poems until recently. I feared that the culture that I lived in from 1965 to 2015 was not supportive of this kind of humanism. Maybe I was wrong. When I received a national award for humanism in medicine from my professional colleagues in 2017, the audience seemed to enjoy my poems. My purpose in sharing these poems now is to encourage young people to reflect about life, talk about it and perhaps write their own lyrical autobiography. The poems in this collection deal with life, death, youth, sex, vocation, work, career, love, marriage, friendship and aging well. What more is there?

But things changed dramatically when he began suffering from inexplicable fatigue. In a matter of weeks, his organs were failing and he was read his last rites. Doctors were baffled by his condition, which they had yet to even diagnose. Floating in and out of consciousness, Fajgenbaum prayed for the equivalent of a game day overtime: a second chance. Miraculously, Fajgenbaum survived—only to endure repeated near-death relapses from what would eventually be identified as a form of Castleman disease, an extremely deadly and rare condition that acts like a cross between cancer and an autoimmune disorder. When he relapsed while on the only drug in development and realized that the medical community was unlikely to make progress in time to save his life, Fajgenbaum turned his desperate hope for a cure into concrete action: Between hospitalizations he studied his own charts and tested his own blood samples, looking for clues that could unlock a new treatment. With the help of family, friends, and mentors, he also reached out to other Castleman disease patients and physicians, and eventually came up with an ambitious plan to crowdsource the most promising research questions and recruit world-class researchers to tackle them. Instead of waiting for the scientific stars to align, he would attempt to align them himself. More than five years later and now married to his college sweetheart, Fajgenbaum has seen his hard work pay off: A treatment that he identified has induced a tentative remission and his novel approach to collaborative scientific inquiry has become a blueprint for advancing rare disease research. His incredible story demonstrates the potency of hope, and what can happen when the forces of determination, love, family, faith, and serendipity collide.
