Polemic Paper from the year 2016 in the subject Theology - Miscellaneous, grade: 12, language: English, abstract: There are hundreds of arguments for and against the case of the existence of God. This topic is very touchy for many scientists, as they might believe that the existence of God would threaten the concrete truths of science, but this is not the case. The existence of God is not only allowed within the realm of science, but it logically fits in to the laws of science that we already have. For these reasons, it is important to conduct research and show the evidence for the argument of the existence of God.

alleviating inherited disease and disability and maximizing individual liberty. There are many arguments against research and application of this new technology based on a variety of grounds, including both deontological and consequentialist objections. In this thesis I examine arguments from both of these positions and argue that neither offers a satisfactory justification for prohibiting research into HGE nor do they demonstrate that the application of the knowledge gained from such research is necessarily wrong. I also suggest that there is a strong argument in favor of HGE in that it may offer a way to reduce the amount of disadvantage currently present in our society as a result of genetic disease and disability by addressing the genetic causes of these conditions. Further, I argue that the pursuit of HGE is necessary in order to promote individual liberty and promote equality of opportunity. Finally, I argue that by examining principles that require us to promote individual liberty we can establish the categories of enhancements which we should publicly fund and those that should merely be permissible.

Condensed Arguments in Favor of the Gold Standard

Excerpt from Politics an Argument in Favor of the Inalienable Rights of Man HE effort to substitute reason for force in human government has not been many times seriously attempted in the history of the race, and has been successful in very few instances. Man's development began with his physical or animal nature, and it was but natural therefore, that the attempt at government should have assumed at first the character of force. With the development of the intellect has come a rebellion against a government of force, and a longing for one based upon reason. But the development of the reason, though making immense strides in the 5000 years of the world's history, has had to struggle hard against the mere animal in man; and looking back from the heights of this closing scene of the soth century it still looks as if the mere animal was yet in the ascendancy, and that the race had not yet secured for itself the domination of its reason in matters governmental, much less the domination of its spiritual 'nature. The race is thinking hard, but it thinks largely along the lines of its animal parts, and we have as a result, government based on force with the selfishness of the animal in the ascendancy.
